

SALES SNIPER

LITTLE BOOK OF REFRAMES

12 Ways to Shift Your Prospect's Mindset
and Make a Sale

SALES SNIPER SOP'S

LITTLE BOOK OF REFRAMES

Objection-handling is, undoubtedly, one of the longest and most complicated parts of a sales call. Whether it's about money, an appeal to a third-party that's currently not present, or fear, people always have reservations about proceeding with the program or service that you're pitching.

When you've hit a roadblock and you can't seem to get past your prospect's objections, sometimes, you have to help them make a mindset shift and nudge them in the right direction in order to make a sale. But how do you reframe your prospect's mindset? What should you say to guide them to your desired endgame?

That's what we're here to offer in this Little Book of Reframes.

WHAT IS THE LITTLE BOOK OF REFRAMES?

People have beliefs that are deeply ingrained in them. Most of the time, changing those beliefs take a lot of work—that's if it's even possible. However, with the use of a psychological technique called reframe, you might be able to break down the wall that's stopping you from converting that lead.

Reframing is a sales technique that allows people to take a look at the problem from a different angle and challenges their preconceived notions. In this guide, we listed 11 tried and true reframe scripts for different scenarios. It's the evergreen solution for salespeople who are having trouble overcoming objections get unstuck and effectively shift their prospect's mindset.

12 REFRAME SCENARIOS

There are three different types of objections (fear, money, and partner), but several different causes of why these objections occur. This guide includes 11 common scenarios that usually come out during a call.

REFRAME 1 Limited Mindset

Sometimes, your prospect objects because they are unable to see beyond their current situation. In that scenario, this scripting comes in handy:

Salesperson: Okay. So, I can understand that this is a big move for you and that you might need to think about it or take some time. May I ask you a question? Do you feel your mindset and decision-making process have got you to where you are today?

Prospect: Yes, of course.

S: Okay. And are you 100% happy with where you are at with XYZ right now?

P: Well, no.

S: Okay, And do you want that decision-making process to dictate your results moving forward into the future?

P: No, I don't.

S: Why not?

...

S: So, I guess this is a fork in the road buddy: stay where you are, keep recreating the same reality, or get the new skills and knowledge and get where you want to go. Which is it going to be?

REFRAME 2 Limited Mindset

Another effective way to attack an objection in the same scenario would be through this:

“We all make decisions based on our perspective. But the hardest thing is making decisions based on where we WANT to be. The overweight person is only overweight because they MAKE the CHOICES that an overweight person makes. They have a fundamentally flawed decision-making process around health, fitness, and nutrition. It is not UNTIL they make the decisions of a fit and healthy person that they BECOME a fit and healthy person. Do you get what I mean? So what choices do you need to start making to get the perspective that you WANT to have?

So what action do you feel is going to allow you to achieve XYZ?”

REFRAME 3 Been Burned Before

A blast from the past would help your prospects reevaluate their current mindset on their situation. Pack it with a combo of your own testimonial and you're well on your way to closing that call.

“I sense that you may have had some bad experiences in the past relating to X. May I ask you a question?

When you were 15 or that sort of age, did you have a real crappy boyfriend/girlfriend who hurt you by dumping you or cheating on you or in some other way?

And has that stopped you from going out and finding a decent person and enjoyed connection and partnership with? Or did you stay single?

Are you going to let the memory of a bad experience stop you from experiencing the benefits of the program that will allow you to achieve XYZ?

[Layer] Credibility statement: I have done this course myself and I got X result.

So what action do you feel is going to allow you to achieve XYZ?"

REFRAME 4 Value Reframe

Sometimes, people want to know what's in it for them. If they fail to see the value in the product or service that you're offering, chances are, you're no way near closing that call. So use that as a reference to pivot your prospect's mindset.

"Okay, I hear you and I can see what you mean by that. May I ask you a question? If I was able to help you achieve a level in your business where you were achieving $XX a month every month within the next 12 weeks, what would that be worth to you?"

I mean, there's always the DIY option and many people do it. But, it takes years of trial and error to make it work and a lot more than 10K in wasted ad spend...

[Layer] May I ask if this is a 'value' thing? Or do you, maybe, lack the belief in yourself or the business?"

If, "business" - Confidence-Builder statement

If, "myself" - Reframe 5: Self-Belief

THE CONFIDENCE-BUILDER STATEMENT:

To bring someone into the buying pocket, here's how you build their confidence:

"Hey, listen. Even after speaking to you for a short time, it's obvious to see that you have a real aptitude for this. It may be just getting the skills... Really interesting..."

REFRAME 5 Self-Belief

People love testimonials and case studies. It helps them see and hear an actual result on a certain product or service. Nothing could convince a person more than the salesperson himself believing in his own product. Use that to your advantage to close the deal.

"May I quickly tell you my story? I was in exactly the same position as you... I needed help in saving my business and the program was 15K... It was a stretch but it was do-or-die so I rang up my dad and asked him what I should do.

And he said... What would you do if you knew you couldn't fail? So I did it and that's why I'm in this chair today. You see, the thing is, it boils down to 2 things: one, we make decisions from a place of 'What if I fail and that means we stay stuck?'; or two, we make decisions from a place where we ask ourselves what if we succeed and we try and for the most part we get the result...

Some decisions have very little impact on our lives and others will directly contribute to our success. So what action do you feel you need to take so that when you go to bed tonight, you have done everything you can to make XYZ a reality?"

REFRAME 6 Fear of the Unknown

It definitely shouldn't, for people who say after you explain to me exactly how the program works and they'd say it makes sense, but they still have a limiting belief because they can't see themselves yet on the other side of the destination.

"It's completely normal that the other side doesn't make sense. It is completely normal that you're having a disconnect seeing yourself at that destination. It's not your job to know exactly how you're gonna get there.

When you... when you buy a plane ticket, you don't go to the pilot and say, 'Hey pilot, let me take a look around your cockpit because I want to make sure that you know, you know how to get me from London to New York.'

That's not your responsibility. It's the pilot's responsibility to get you from London to New York. Your only responsibility is to show up on your flight. Show up on your flight, strap on your seat belt, and let's go for this ride. And as long as you can do that, as long as you can buy your ticket and show up, we'll do the rest. We'll bring you to your destination. But you gotta show up. You gotta show up, gotta buy the ticket.

You gotta hop on the flight and you have to come along for the ride. Are you willing to do that?"

REFRAME 7 Fear of the Unknown 2

Most people that are stuck in situations that they do not want to be in, What we found is that they're usually stuck because they'll explore the risk of moving forward and you'll hear it and things like, what if this doesn't work out, but they'll never explore the risk of staying exactly where they're at in a situation where they don't want to be in. So in this situation, I ask them this:

"What happens if 3, 6, or even 12 months from now, you are in this exact same spot that you're in now. What happens?"

REFRAME 8 DIY Mindset

When you notice that they may be a bit of an 'I want to try it on my own' person, here's what you need to do:

"Can I ask you a question—and you can let me know if I'm wrong here—but, it seems like you're a pretty do-it-yourself type of person. Am I right about that? Okay. Okay. Okay, suppose you found that proven system that was giving you what you were wanting. Will it be a challenge for you to follow that proven system and not try to reinvent the wheel? Or would that not even be an issue? Okay. Okay good. I didn't want to assume."

REFRAME 9

Limited Mindset

Here's another way to attack a mindset of a person who can't see beyond their current situation:

"Right now you've got the perfect strategy to be where you're exactly meant to be. Whatever you're doing, it's perfectly fine based on your decisions, thoughts, feelings, actions, and the meaning you've attached to everything in your life. We, as humans, are perfectly designed where we are meant to be. You've been running an unconscious strategy and unconscious patterns of thinking that have led you up to this point in your life. If you would like to change that pattern, it's going to require a new YOU: a new way of thinking, new actions, new skills, and capabilities. Otherwise, you will never be able to change. Right?"

So if you continue to make decisions based on who you are right now, you'll never change and you'll always have what you have. But if you do, that's totally fine by me. But I don't think that's what's best for you. Do you...?"

REFRAME 10

Last-Minute Wobble

Still not breaking down your prospect's walls? If you're already on your last leg, give it one more go using this script:

"That's okay if you want to think about it. But I don't think that's what's best for you given the information you told me a moment ago. We're right at the finish line and this is where we so many people stop and bail..."

But here's the thing: you're going to have to eventually do it, whether it's now, tomorrow, 1 year, or 10 years. And each time you delay the problem is just gonna get worse....

Committing is the hardest thing about this. After this point, all you need to do is follow our lead, take each day as it comes, and get the results that you have been searching for... are you in?"

OUT OF COMFORT ZONE

REFRAME 11

Sometimes, you have to build that hunger in order to get your prospects moving. Let them know that being comfortable in their current situation is the antithesis of progress.

"I know that this feels a little uncomfortable, but this is the way it's got to be... Comfort is the breeding ground for mediocrity. So you can either stay in that breeding ground for another 12, 18 months, or we can start to make the moves so we can start to become the person we wanna be in order to get the results. It's up to you. At the end of the day, it's your choice... So what do YOU need to get the outcomes that you want for you, your business, and your family?"

If your sales pitch is immaculate, you may never need to deal with objections at all. Unfortunately, not all calls are easy. Grappling with objections may be challenging. But getting your prospects to think of their problems in a different way can help them achieve their desired results and help you close that call.

REFRAME 12 Finances a Stretch

Sometimes, your prospects may just be going through a rough patch when it comes to finances, causing them not to achieve their goals. When they're going through a personal financial crisis, this is how you can reframe their line of thought:

“Okay, I hear you and I appreciate that things may be a stretch for you and we have had many people in the same circumstances as you... In fact it’s that common that we call it the ‘Desert Island Syndrome’... Can I explain why?

Imagine you were trapped on a desert island and you had made a raft in order to break free and escape into the open ocean... What part of the process of getting free would be the most challenging?...

It’s breaking past the surf, right ?

And that’s where you are now, your current circumstances are like the waves pushing you back, stopping you... But the truth is, you are so close to success and one solid push and you are away... Free...

It means packing everything you have on the raft, putting your head down, and just going for it and throwing everything at the surf. Because if you don’t the surfs just gonna keep on pushing you back to the island forever and it’s OKAY for now. But, your resources and your desire are just gonna dwindle... Does that kinda make sense ?

Look I can help you make this stretch so you can break free... Are you in?”

WHY THE LITTLE BOOK OF REFRAMES?

When you scour the Internet for reframe scripts, you’d be surprised to find out that there are none. This guide may not be the ‘be-all-and-end-all,’ for, at the end of the day, it still depends on how you wade through the call and what words you say. But with this resource, we hope to give you a leading-edge advantage over your competitors who don’t have anything, to begin with.

- Different scripts for different scenarios
- Proven and tested scripts made and used by the Sales Sniper

WANT TO EXCEL AT SALES SAVAGERY?

We at Sales Sniper make sure you get the best results and start selling for the best coaches in the world through time-tested strategies. Watch your conversion rates explode by applying at

<https://www.salessniper.net/becoming-a-savage.>